I tumbled out of bed at eight. The sun was shining and the wind howling much as usual. The beach was perfect for bronzing and swimming, so we passed most of the day on it -- Audrey badly burned her thighs with ~~treacherous~~ ^{treacherous} sunshine!

E. Carmen, the three children and the two boys, with Eugène at the wheel of the station wagon, tooled in about 5:30 and we took Sasha and David swimming. Their delight over the waves was almost hysterical.

Tonight we were guests of the Casino at the play "Zoe" by Jean Masson, who was also a member of the excellent cast. Two men and their mistresses, hitherto quite content with each other, allow Zoe, a child of nature, to be foisted on their circle with hilarious results.
